England Add Rising Star Noah Caluori to Autumn Internationals Squad

England have included Saracens youngster Noah Caluori to practice with the team ahead of the Autumn Internationals. Caluori, 19, notched five tries for Saracens in their rout of Sale Sharks on Saturday in what was his first league start. That remarkable form has seen him accelerated into the England setup, where he was named as an additional player in a development role in the latest 36-man squad.

Whether he secures the final cut when Steve Borthwick announces the full lineup for their four-Test campaign next Sunday remains uncertain, but it is still an extraordinary rise for the breakthrough talent.
Elsewhere, there’s no selection for Saracens No. 8 Tom Willis, who has agreed to join Bordeaux-Bègles ahead of next season.

That switch will render him unqualified for England representation under the Rugby Football Union rules. There is also no position for Owen Farrell, who is returning to Saracens after a challenging spell at Racing 92. He withdrew from England duty after the 2023 Rugby World Cup and is concentrating on rediscovering his peak form at Saracens.

But Borthwick has rewarded Leicester’s Adam Radwan and Bath’s Henry Arundell with selections.

Both flyers offer explosive pace and will hope to be granted a chance to impress this autumn as England confronts Australia, Fiji, New Zealand, and Argentina.

Autumn Internationals 2025: Borthwick Faces Setback as Willis Exits and Squad Reshaped

There's also a recall for Leicester No. 8 Emeka Ilione with injuries to Ben Curry and Tom Curry, and Willis's absence creates a door open in the back row. Bath's Max Ojomoh also receives the nod, with Gloucester's Seb Atkinson sidelined. Tom Willis has been omitted from England's pre-autumn squad after finalizing a move to France from Saracens.

Willis' club confirmed on Saturday that the No. 8 would be departing at the end of the campaign, with a deal reportedly agreed to re-join Bordeaux-Bègles. The news comes as a significant setback to Steve Borthwick, who had granted Willis an upgraded EPS contract worth around £160,000 in August but has now found that the back-rower has withdrawn from World Cup eligibility.

Borthwick has decided not to include Willis in a 36-player group that will convene at England's Bagshot base on Sunday to commence preparation for the Autumn Internationals 2025 matches against Australia, Fiji, New Zealand, and Argentina.

There is no room, either, for Owen Farrell, with Borthwick retaining Fin Smith, George Ford, and Marcus Smith as his fly-half choices, but Henry Arundell is restored after an excellent start to the season with Bath in the Prem, along with fellow speedster Adam Radwan. Willis's departure is a major defeat for Borthwick, having started the No. 8 five times this year, including in both wins on the tour of Argentina in July.

England Vs Fiji: England Focus on Depth and Flexibility Ahead of Autumn Internationals

Ben Earl appears likely to begin November at the base of the scrum, while Chandler Cunningham-South, included despite an injury scare against Exeter, and Henry Pollock are other selections named in this training squad. Alex Dombrandt was not considered for selection owing to injury.

The decision of a player entering their prime to transfer to the Top 14 could also be viewed as a setback to the Rugby Football Union (RFU), which had introduced enhanced EPS contracts in the hope of retaining key players domestically. Willis, however, enjoyed a creative stint in Bordeaux after the end of Wasps in 2022 and has observed his brother Jack flourish in France with Toulouse in recent years.

The elder Willis sibling was named the Top 14 Player of the Year earlier in October, but has been disqualified for England selection since the end of the 2023 Rugby

World Cup. England commence their autumn series against Australia at Allianz Stadium, Twickenham, on Saturday, November 1, before facing Fiji, New Zealand, and Argentina.

As England moves into their final phase of preparation for the Autumn Internationals, head coach Steve Borthwick emphasized the importance of adaptability and squad depth across all positions. He stated that maintaining a competitive environment during training will be vital to ensuring consistency throughout the demanding Four-Test schedule.
